

A Foreign Office Romance

SIR ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE

Published in the Indianapolis News in November 1894.

THE INDIANAPOLIS NEWS
MONDAY EVENING JULY 23, 1934
TWENTY-TWO PAGES
THREE CENTS

FEDERAL AGENTS WRITE FINIS TO VIVID CRIME CAREER OF DILLINGER, AMERICA'S NO. 1 BANDIT EXTRA!
THREE SHOTS FELL NATION'S HUNTED OUTLAW AS HE EMERGES FROM MOVIE THEATER IN CHICAGO

DISGUISE FAILS OUTLAW
$740 IS FOUND IN POCKET

DESPERADO PUT ON SPOT
Chicago Resident, Exposed Information, in Federal Agents' Task.

GETTING TIRESOME
A hand pours coins into a tin can labeled "DOLLARS FOR DILLINGER".

FIVE DEAD AS CITY HEAT WAVE HOLDS
Victims of Unprecedented Heat Weather Perish Includes Young and Old.
NO RELIEF INDICATED
Mercury Goes Into 90s Early in Day—Sunday High Reak Above 100.

275 DEAD AS HEAT EXTENDS ITS SWAY
More Severe Temperatures Forecast in All Areas as Damage Rises.

THE WEATHER
Forecast for July 23, 1934.
INDIANAPOLIS: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
CHICAGO: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
ST. LOUIS: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
CINCINNATI: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
COLUMBIANA: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
MEMPHIS: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
NASHVILLE: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
KANSAS CITY: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
DENVER: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
BOULDER: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
SALT LAKE CITY: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
PHOENIX: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
SAN ANTONIO: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
HOUSTON: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
SAN DIEGO: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
LOS ANGELES: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
SAN FRANCISCO: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
SEATTLE: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
PORTLAND: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
SPRINGFIELD: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.
INDIANAPOLIS: Partly cloudy, with a few showers or showers, with a high of 78 and a low of 62.

JOHN WOULD HAVE WISE WAY, SAYS BEREAVED FATHER WHO DEATH NEWS REACHES HUMBLE HOME
A man in a hat and coat is shown in a photograph.

OUTLAW'S NAME ON LIPS OF WORLD WITHIN YEAR
John Dillinger's name is mentioned in various news items.

AT LEAST 16 DIE IN FIERY BUS WRECK
Many Others Injured and Missing as Vehicle Plunges Down Embankment.

WATCHMAN HELD IN PARK SLAYING
Over Heated, 35, Tells How That Fatal Young Woman on Bench.

JOHN AT FAIR ONE YEAR AGO
John Dillinger is mentioned in a news item about a fair.

YOUTH DIES AFTER BLOW OF AIRPLANE PROPELLER
A young man is mentioned in a news item about an airplane accident.

DELINQUENT PICTURE FOUND IN DILLINGER MATCH CASE
A picture is mentioned in a news item about a match case.

DISGUISE FAILS OUTLAW
John Dillinger is mentioned in a news item about a disguise.

$740 IS FOUND IN POCKET
A sum of money is mentioned in a news item about a pocket.

DESPERADO PUT ON SPOT
John Dillinger is mentioned in a news item about a desperado.

GETTING TIRESOME
A hand is mentioned in a news item about getting tiresome.

FIVE DEAD AS CITY HEAT WAVE HOLDS
Five people are mentioned in a news item about a heat wave.

275 DEAD AS HEAT EXTENDS ITS SWAY
275 people are mentioned in a news item about heat.

THE WEATHER
Weather forecast is mentioned in a news item.

A FOREIGN OFFICE ROMANCE

There are many folk who knew Alphonse Lacour in his old age. From about the time of the Revolution of '48 until he died in the second year of the Crimean War he was always to be found in the same corner of the Cafe de Provence, at the end of the Rue St. Honore, coming down about nine in the evening, and going when he could find no one to talk with. It took some self-restraint to listen to the old diplomatist, for his stories were beyond all belief, and yet he was quick at detecting the shadow of a smile or the slightest little raising of the eyebrows. Then his huge, rounded back would straighten itself, his bulldog chin would project, and his r's would burr like a kettledrum. When he got as far as, "Ah, monsieur r-r-r-rit!" or "Vous ne me cr- r-r-royez pas donc!" it was quite time to remember you had a ticket for the opera. There was his story of Talleyrand and the five oyster-shells, and there was his utterly absurd account of Napoleon's second visit to Ajaccio. Then there was that most circumstantial romance (which he never ventured upon until his second bottle had been uncorked) of the Emperor's escape from St. Helena—how he lived for a whole year in Philadelphia, while Count Herbert de Bertrand, who was his living image, personated him at Longwood. But of all his stories there was none which was more notorious than of the Koran and the Foreign Office messenger. And yet when Monsieur Otto's memoirs were written it was found there really was some foundation for old Lacour's incredible statement.

"You must know, monsieur," he would say, "I left Egypt after Kleber's assassination. I would gladly have stayed on, for I was engaged in a translation of the Koran, and between ourselves I had thoughts at the time of embracing Mahometanism, for I was deeply struck by the wisdom of their views about marriage. They had made an incredible mistake, however, upon the subject of wine, and this was what the Mufti who attempted to convert me could never get over. Then when old Kleber died and Menou came to the top, I felt it was time for me to go. It is not for me to speak of my own capacities, monsieur, but you will readily understand the man does not care to be ridden by the mule. I carried my Koran and my papers to London, where Monsieur Otto had been sent by the First Consul to arrange a treaty of peace; for both nations were very weary of the war, which had already lasted ten years. Here I was most useful to Monsieur Otto on account of my knowledge of the English tongue, and also, if I may say so, on account of my natural capacity. They were happy days during which I lived in the square of Bloomsbury. The climate of monsieur's country is, it must be confessed, detestable. But then what would you have? Flowers grow best in the rain. One has but to point to monsieur's fellow country-women to prove it.

"Well, Monsieur Otto, our Ambassador, was kept terribly busy over that treaty, and all of his staff were worked to death. We had not Pitt to deal with, which was, perhaps, as well for us. He was a terrible man that Pitt, and wherever half a dozen enemies of France were plotting together, there was his sharp-pointed nose right in the middle of them. The nation, however, had been thoughtful enough to put him out of office, and we had to do with Monsieur Addington. But Milord Hawkesbury was the Foreign Minister, and it was with him we were obliged to do our bargaining. You can understand it was no child's play. After ten years of war each nation had got hold of a great deal which had belonged to the other, or to the other's allies. What was to be given back, and what was to be kept? Is this island worth that peninsula? If we do this at Venice, will you do that at Sierra Leone? If we give up Egypt to the Sultan, will you restore the Cape of Good Hope, which you have taken from our allies the Dutch? So we wrangled and wrestled, and I have seen Monsieur Otto come back to the Embassy so exhausted his secretary and I had to help him from his carriage to his sofa. But at last things adjusted themselves, and the night came round when the treaty was to be finally signed. Now, you must know the one great card which we held, and which we played, played at every point of the game, was we had Egypt. The English were very nervous about our being there.

"It gave us a foot at each end of the Mediterranean, you see. And they were not sure that wonderful little Napoleon of ours might not make it the base of an advance against India. So whenever Lord Hawkesbury proposed to retain anything, we had only to reply, 'In that case, of course, we cannot consent to evacuate Egypt,' and in this way we quickly brought him to reason. It was by the help of Egypt we gained terms which were remarkably favourable, and especially we caused the English to consent to give up the Cape of Good Hope. We did not wish your people, monsieur, to have any foothold in South Africa, for history has taught us the British foothold of one half-century is the British Empire of the next. It is not your army or your navy against which we have to guard, but it is your terrible younger son and your man in search of a career. When we French have a possession across the seas, we like to sit in Paris and to felicitate ourselves upon it. With you it is different. You take your wives and your children, and you run away to see what kind of place this may be, and after that we might as well try to take that old Square of Bloomsbury away from you.

HIS KNEES GAVE WAY, AND HE FELL SENSELESS UPON THE FLOOR.

"Well, it was upon the first of October the treaty was finally to be signed. In the morning I was congratulating Monsieur Otto upon the happy conclusion of his labours. He was a little pale shrimp of a man, very quick and nervous, and he was so delighted now at his own success he could not sit still, but ran about the room chattering and laughing, while I sat on a cushion in the corner, as I had learned to do in the East. Suddenly, in came a messenger with a letter which had been forwarded from Paris. Monsieur Otto cast his eye upon it, and then, without a word, his knees gave way, and he fell senseless upon the floor. I ran to him, as did the courier, and between us we carried him to the sofa. He might have been dead from his appearance, but I could still feel his heart thrilling beneath my palm. 'What is this, then?' I asked.

"I do not know,' answered the messenger.' Monsieur Talleyrand told me to hurry as never man hurried before, and to put this letter into the hands of Monsieur Otto. I was in Paris at midday yesterday.'

"I know I am to blame, but I could not help glancing at the letter, picking it out of the

"MY GOD, THE THUNDERBOLT THAT IT WAS!"

senseless hand of Monsieur Otto. My God! the thunderbolt it was! I did not faint, but I sat down beside my chief and I burst into tears. It was but a few words, but they told us Egypt had been evacuated by our troops a month before. All our treaty was undone then, and the one consideration which had induced our enemies to give us good terms had vanished. In twelve hours it would not have mattered. But now the treaty was not yet signed. We should have to give up the Cape. We should have to let England have Malta. Now Egypt was gone we had nothing left to offer in exchange. But we are not so easily beaten, we Frenchmen. You English misjudge us when you think because we show emotions which you conceal, we are therefore of a weak and womanly nature. You cannot read your histories and believe that. Monsieur Otto recovered his senses presently, and we took counsel what we should do.

"'It is useless to go on, Alphonse,' said he. 'This Englishman will laugh at me when I ask him to sign.'

"'Courage!' I cried; and then a sudden thought coming into my head— 'How do we know the English will have news of this? Perhaps they may sign the treaty before they know of it.'

"Monsieur Otto sprang from the sofa and flung himself into my arms.

"'Alphonse,' he cried, 'you have saved me! Why should they know about it? Our news has come from Toulon to Paris, and thence straight to London. Theirs will come by sea through the Straits of Gibraltar. At this moment it is unlikely anyone in Paris knows of it, save only Talleyrand and the First Consul. If we keep our secret, we may still get our treaty signed.'

"Ah! monsieur, you can imagine the horrible uncertainty in which we spent the day. Never, never shall I forget those slow hours during which we sat together, starting at every distant shout, lest it should be the first sign of the rejoicing which this news would cause in London. Monsieur Otto passed from youth to age in a day. As for me, I find it easier to go out and meet danger than to wait for it. I set forth, therefore, towards evening. I wandered here, and wandered there. I was in the fencing-rooms of Monsieur Angelo, and in the salon-de-boxe of Monsieur Jackson, and in the club of Brooks, and in the lobby of the Chamber of Deputies, but nowhere did I hear any news. Still, it was possible Milord Hawkesbury had received it himself just as we had. He lived in Harley Street, and there it was the treaty was to be finally signed that night at eight. I entreated Monsieur Otto to drink two glasses of Burgundy before he went, for I feared lest his haggard face and trembling hands should rouse suspicion in the English minister.

"Well, we went round together in one of the Embassy's carriages about half-past seven. Monsieur Otto went in alone; but presently, on excuse of getting his portfolio, he came out again, with his cheeks flushed with joy, to tell me all was well.

"'He knows nothing,' he whispered. 'Ah, if the next half-hour were over!'

"'Give me a sign when it is settled,' said I.

"'For what reason?'

"'Because until then no messenger shall interrupt you. I give you my promise—I, Alphonse Lacour.'

"He clasped my hand in both of his.

"'I shall make an excuse to move one of the candles on to the table in the window,' said he, and hurried into the house, whilst I was left waiting beside the carriage.

"Well, if we could but secure ourselves from interruption for a single half-hour the day would be our own. I had hardly begun to form my plans when I saw the lights of a carriage coming swiftly from the direction of Oxford Street. Ah! if it should be the messenger! What could I do? I was prepared to kill him—yes, even to kill him—rather than at this last moment allow our work to be undone. Thousands die to make a glorious war. Why should not one die to make a glorious peace? What though they hurried me to the scaffold? I should have sacrificed myself for my country. I had a little curved Turkish knife strapped to my waist. My hand was on the hilt of it when the carriage which had alarmed me so rattled safely past me.

"But another might come. I must be prepared. Above all, I must not compromise the Embassy. I ordered our carriage to move on, and I engaged what you call a hackney coach. Then I spoke to the driver, and gave him a guinea. He understood it was a special service.

"'You shall have another guinea if you do what you are told,' said I.

"'All right, master,' said he, turning his slow eyes upon me without a trace of excitement or curiosity.

"'If I enter your coach with another gentleman, you will drive up and down Harley Street, and take no orders from anyone but me.

When I get out, you will carry the other gentleman to Watier's Club, in Bruton Street.'

"'All right, master,' said he again.

"So I stood outside Milord Hawkesbury's house, and you can think how often my eyes went up to that window in the hope of seeing the candle twinkle in it. Five minutes passed, and another five. Oh, how slowly they crept along! It was a true October night, raw and cold, with a white fog crawling over the wet, shining cobblestones, and blurring the dim oil-lamps. I could not see fifty paces in either direction, but my ears were straining, straining, to catch the rattle of hoofs or the rumble of wheels. It is not a cheering place, monsieur, that street of Harley, even upon a sunny day. The houses are solid and very respectable over yonder, but there is nothing of the feminine about them. It is a city to be inhabited by males. But on that raw night, amid the damp and the fog, with the anxiety gnawing at my heart, it seemed the saddest, weariest spot in the whole wide world. I paced up and down slapping my hands to keep them warm, and still straining my ears. And then suddenly out of the dull hum of the traffic down in Oxford Street I heard a sound detach itself, and grow louder and louder, and clearer and clearer with every instant, until two yellow lights came flashing through the fog, and a light cabriolet whirled up to the door of the Foreign Minister. It had not stopped before a young fellow sprang out of it and hurried to the steps, while the driver turned his horse and rattled off into the fog once more. Ah, it is in the moment of action I am best, monsieur. You, who only see me when I am drinking my wine in the Cafe de Provence, cannot conceive the heights to which I rise. At that moment, when I knew the fruits of a ten years' war were at stake, I was magnificent. It was the last French campaign and I the general and army in one.

"YOU ARE TO FOLLOW ME AT ONCE."

"'Sir," said I, touching him upon the arm, 'are you the messenger for Lord Hawkesbury?'

"'Yes,' said he.

"'I have been waiting for you half an hour,' said I. 'You are to follow me at once. He is with the French Ambassador.'

"I spoke with such assurance he never hesitated for an instant. When he entered the hackney coach and I followed him in, my heart gave such a thrill of joy I could hardly keep from shouting aloud. He was a poor little creature, this Foreign Office messenger, not much bigger than Monsieur Otto, and I—monsieur can see my hands now, and imagine what they were like when I was seven-and-twenty years of age.

"Well, now I had him in my coach, the question was what I should do with him. I did not wish to hurt him if I could help it.

"'This is a pressing business,' said he. 'I have a despatch which I must deliver instantly.'

"Our coach had rattled down Harley Street now, in accordance with my instruction, it turned and began to go up again.

"'Hullo!' he cried. 'What's this?'

"'What then?' I asked.

"'We are driving back. Where is Lord Hawkesbury?'

"'We shall see him presently.'

"'Let me out!' he shouted.' There's some trickery in this. Coachman, stop the coach! Let me out, I say!'

"I dashed him back into his seat as he tried to turn the handle of the door. He roared for help. I clapped my palm across his mouth. He made his teeth meet through the side of it. I seized his own cravat and bound it over his lips. He still mumbled and gurgled, but the noise was covered by the rattle of our wheels. We were passing the minister's house, and there was no candle in the window.

"The messenger sat quiet for a little, and I could see the glint of his eyes as he stared at me through the gloom. He was partly stunned, I think, by the force with which I had hurled him into his seat. And also he was pondering, perhaps, what he should do next. Presently he got his mouth partly free from the cravat.

"'You shall have my watch and my purse if you will let me go,' said he.

"'Sir,' said I, 'I am as honourable a man as you are yourself.'

"'Who are you, then?'

"'My name is of no importance.'

"'What do you want with me?'

"'It is a bet.'

"'A bet? What d'you mean? Do you understand I am on the Government service, and you will see the inside of a gaol for this?'

"'That is the bet. That is the sport, said I.'

"'You may find it poor sport before you finish,' he cried.' What is this insane bet of yours then?'

"'I have bet,' I answered, 'I will recite a chapter of the Koran to the first gentleman whom I should meet in the street.'

"I do not know what made me think of it, save my translation was always running in my head. He clutched at the door-handle, and again I had to hurl him back into his seat.

"'How long will it take?' he gasped.

"'It depends on the chapter,' I answered.

"'A short one, then, and let me go!'

"'But is it fair?' I argued.' When I say a chapter, I do not mean the shortest chapter, but rather one which should be of average length.'

"'Help! help! help!' he squealed, and I was compelled again to adjust his cravat.

"'A little patience,' said I, 'and it will soon be over. I should like to recite the chapter which would be of most interest to yourself. You will confess I am trying to make things as pleasant as I can for you?'

He slipped his mouth free again.

"'Quick, then, quick!' he groaned.

"'The Chapter of the Camel?' I suggested.

"'Yes, yes.'

"'Or that of the Fleet Stallion?'

"'Yes, yes. Only proceed!'

"We had passed the window and there was no candle. I settled down to recite the Chapter of the Stallion to him. Perhaps you do not know your Koran very well, monsieur? Well, I knew it by heart then, as I know it by heart now. The style is a little exasperating for anyone who is in a hurry. But, then, what would you have? The people in the East are never in a hurry, and it was written for them. I repeated it all with the dignity and solemnity which a sacred book demands, and the young Englishman he wriggled and groaned.

"'When the horses, standing on three feet and placing the tip of their fourth foot upon the ground, were mustered in front of him in the evening, he said, I have loved the love of earthly good above the remembrance of things on high, and have spent the time in viewing these horses. Bring the horses back to me. And when they were brought back he began to cut off their legs and —'

"It was at this moment the young Englishman sprang at me. My God! how little can I remember of the next few minutes! He was a boxer, this shred of a man. He had been trained to strike. I tried to catch him by the hands. Pac, pac, he came upon my nose and upon my eye. I put down my head and thrust at him with it. Pac, he came from below. But ah! I was too much for him. I hurled myself upon him, and he had no place where he could escape from my weight. He fell flat upon the cushions and I seated myself upon him with such conviction the wind flew from him as from a burst bellows. Then I searched to see what there was with which I could tie him. I drew the strings from my shoes, and with one I secured his wrists, and with another his ankles. Then I tied the cravat round his mouth again, so he could only lie and glare at me. When I had done all this, and had stopped the bleeding of my own nose, I looked out of the coach and ah, monsieur, the very first thing which caught my eyes was that candle—that dear little candle—glimmering in the window of the minister. Alone, with these two hands, I had retrieved the capitulation of an army and the loss of a province. Yes, monsieur, what Abercrombie and 5,000 men had done upon the beach at Aboukir was undone by me, single-handed, in a hackney coach in Harley Street.

"Well, I had no time to lose, for at any moment Monsieur Otto might be down. I shouted to my driver, gave him his second guinea, and allowed him to proceed to Watier's. For myself, I sprang into our Embassy's carriage, and a moment later the door of the minister opened. He had himself escorted Monsieur Otto downstairs, and now so deep was he in talk he walked out bareheaded as far as the carriage. As he stood there by the open door, there came the rattle of wheels, and a man rushed down the pavement.

MILORD HAWKESBURY CAUGHT THE PAPER FROM HIS HAND, AND READ IT BY THE LIGHT OF THE CARRIAGE LAMP.

"'A despatch of great importance for Milord Hawkesbury!' he cried.

"I could see it was not my messenger, but a second one. Milord Hawkesbury caught the paper from his hand, and read it by the light of the carriage lamp. His face, monsieur, was as white as this plate, before he had finished.

"'Monsieur Otto,' he cried, 'we have signed this treaty upon a false understanding. Egypt is in our hands.'

"'What!' cried Monsieur Otto. 'Impossible!'

"'It is certain. It fell to Abercrombie last month.'

"'In that case,' said Monsieur Otto, 'it is very fortunate the treaty is signed.'

"'Very fortunate for you, sir,' cried Milord Hawkesbury, as he turned back to the house.

"Next day, monsieur, what they call the Bow Street runners were after me, but they could not run across salt water, and Alphonse Lacour was receiving the congratulations of Monsieur Talleyrand and the First Consul before ever his pursuers had got as far as Dover."